Claim Rejections - 35 U.S.C. § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-18 and 20 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. § 103 (a) as being unpatentable over Crisan (US 2003/0121964 A1) in view of Strauch et al. (US 5,861,823).

With respect to claims 1,6-8,12-14,18 and 19 Crisan teaches a keypad having three principle buttons or keys capable of performing twelve switch operations or dialing telephone numbers as shown in Figs.6 and 9 of Crisan (see, also, page 3, paragraph 0034, line 6). Crisan does not clearly teach the four tactile depressible areas of the key. However, Strauch et al. teaches a keypad having multifunction keys (i.e., at least four tactile depressible areas) which transmit tactile sensation to the users' fingers (Strauch et al., col.5 lines 52-54). In view of the teaching of Strauch et al., it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to modify the buttons or keys of Crisan by substituting the keys as taught by Strauch et al. to improve the efficiency of operating or typing on a keypad.

With respect to claims 5, 11 and 17, Crisan teaches all that is claimed, except the button or key having a raised structure. Strauch et al. teaches a key 80 having a raised structure 88 to provide additional tactile sensation (Fig.5 and col.5 lines 55 and 56). Therefore, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to modify the button or key of Crisan by providing the key having a raised structure as taught by Strauch et al. for ease of typing.

Art Unit: 2854

Claim 19 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. § 103 (a) as being unpatentable over Crisan in view of Strauch et al. as applied to claims 1-18 and 20 above, and further in view of Goodson (US 5,359,658).

Crisan and Strauch et al. teach all that is claimed, except for the overlay material which is used with the buttons or keys. Goodson teaches a keypad having an overlay 11 as shown in Figs. 1 and 3. In view of the teaching of Goodson, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to modify the keypad of Crisan and Strauch et al. by providing the overlay as taught by Goodson for protecting the keypad.

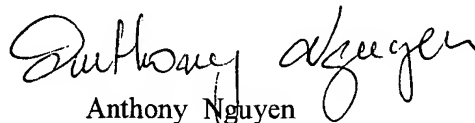

Conclusion

The patents to Krishnan, Jaargui et al. and Kraus et al. are cited to show other structures having obvious similarities to the claimed structure.
